Gaming Consent Form

Video Games – Online Games – Role Playing Games

Play and therapy have been used together in treatment for over 50 years. Gaming can be a useful therapeutic tool in treatment as it allows for rapport building and increasing individualization of the treatment plan.

Video games, online games, and role-playing games have their specific benefits and risks. This document is designed to inform clients of those benefits and risks and consent to specific gameplay. This document also reports the expectations and etiquette during the use of these digital supplemental platforms.

General Awareness: I will evaluate if gaming would be a good fit for clinical treatment. Some areas I will evaluate: the gaming devices you have, what games you own, your access to the Internet, your bandwidth, and your personal preferences around gaming. If you have a specific interest in certain games that I have not used before, I will evaluate if they can be used therapeutically. I will also consider your developmental age and, if you are a youth, what your guardians will allow. If you do not have the means to engage in gaming at home, such as limited Internet access or lack of access to gaming devices, it will not be employed in treatment. Please be mindful that general accessibility to the Internet is also one of the determinations of whether online therapy is an appropriate medium for providing treatment and if not accessible, could refer you out to a more appropriate provider or method of therapeutic delivery.

For sessions conducted in the office, gaming will be limited to the devices and supplies available in the office at the time of treatment.

There will be various styles and types of games that we will consider using in your treatment. Some are linear and story-based, where we must accomplish specific tasks in a particular order to complete the game. Some are freeform and allow more opportunity to choose how we engage in the game. Some are more traditional, including card games, matching games, and puzzles. We may even create our own game, depending on which platform we use. No matter the style or outcome, I will consider your clinical needs, the needs identified in the treatment plan, and what interventions can be used with the game. This will be the basis of what we choose to engage in.

It is important to note that gaming can be a very personal experience. Depending on the style and type of gaming, it can often require you to open yourself up, making you more emotionally vulnerable. Additionally, specific themes and gameplay styles may be triggering, particularly if you have a trauma history. It's crucial for you to be aware of this and be open to communicating your needs and expectations with me. Even if not emotionally or mentally triggered, games can be challenging to master, such as learning controls or understanding the rules. If you need me to pause and explain or assist you in figuring out the controls, please do not hesitate to do so.

Additionally, you have the right to discontinue using it whenever you feel uncertain, uncomfortable, or are unable to understand its connection to your treatment. Even if in the middle of gameplay, you can stop at any time. We will explore the reasons for discontinuing, and collaboratively, we will create new boundaries to continue to game, utilize new tools, or learn new coping skills. If clinically determined that the gameplay is not therapeutically helpful, it will be removed as part of the treatment plan.

Game Rating: Another consideration when choosing a game to play includes the game's Entertainment Software Rating Board (ESRB) rating. The game's content and the client's age and maturity level will be considered when selecting a game. Below you will find a description of the ESRB ratings.

- Titles rated EC (Early Childhood) have content that may be suitable for ages 3 and older.
- Titles rated E (Everyone) have content that may be suitable for ages 6 and older.
- Titles rated E10+ (Everyone 10+) have content that may be suitable for ages 10 and older.
- Titles rated T (Teen) have content that may be suitable for ages 13 and older.
- Titles rated M (Mature) have content that may be suitable for ages 17 and older.
- Titles rated AO (Adults Only) have content that should only be played by persons 18 years and older.

Expectations and Etiquettes: There are certain expectations around gaming, including online prosocial engagement and behavior. I will review these expectations with you before engaging in the gameplay.

Throughout gameplay, I will also remind you of them. If there is a continued failure to engage appropriately due to active refusal to change behaviors, I will discontinue using gaming as part of the treatment plan. These are some, but not all, to keep in mind when we use online gaming as a therapeutic tool:

- Before we begin, we may need to “friend” each other to be in the same game or private server. If that is the case, after gameplay, I will “unfriend” you, as part of maintaining privacy and confidentiality. You will be required to do the same.
- Before starting the game, ensure you’re in a private, safe, and secure location to engage in gameplay.
- Before gameplay, you may need to shut off notifications on your device or switch your game into “hidden mode,” so other players you may be friends with do not see you’re in the game.
- You will not be allowed to invite others into the game. Only I will be allowed to add individuals to the game and only do so if these individuals are part of treatment (such as group therapy, family therapy, or couple's therapy, or in situations where collateral with the proper release of information has been set up).
- Neither of us will record gameplay or the session without proper consent and documentation to do so. This will have been determined before gameplay.
 - If a game has a chat component, we will not use this to communicate. All communication typed is made through my identified HIPAA-compliant software. This is to ensure confidentiality.
- Neither of us will disclose personal identification information in these games. That means we will not provide addresses, names, dates of birth, or that we are in an online therapy session.
- If games require a login feature, we will use non-primary email addresses, create usernames that are not identifying, and/or create avatar names that are non-identifying.
- Neither of us will disclose our gaming usernames or account information to others online. That means we will not share login information, usernames, or other gaming. Only prior approved individuals, such as guardians or spouses, will have access to this information.
- If in group therapy, family therapy, or couples therapy, you will communicate via the HIPAA-compliant software and adhere to the following rules:
 - Digitally raise a hand to ask a question.
 - Mute the line when not speaking.
 - No private messaging other participants. Be mindful that I can - see all communication.

 - Respecting and being actively supportive if someone states that they are triggered, that could result in discontinuing gameplay.
 - Keep the identities of others and all experiences during gameplay and throughout the course of treatment as confidential.
- If in group therapy, you will not attempt to "friend" the other group members.
- You may be asked to close other screens or turn off other notifications that distract or take up bandwidth.
- Respecting and allowing each other (and others in treatment) opportunities to understand gameplay language, as often gameplay often includes learning new lingo or new communication styles.

Limited Confidentiality and Limited HIPAA Compliance: As your therapist, I strive to protect your private health information, which includes, but is not limited to, your demographic information, data on treatment progress, date, location, and time of sessions, and even keeping confidential that you are receiving services with me. Some supplemental digital platforms used may not comply with HIPAA standards. If you consent to let me work with these technologies, I will ask that you agree to a limited waiver of your HIPAA rights to privacy and understand that I will, with all due diligence, attempt to protect you and your privacy. Some examples of what information these platforms would have access to include:

- Your IP address if using the Internet (if engaging in online gameplay remotely)
- Knowledge of time spent and types of gameplay used.
- Images associated with digital gaming accounts.
- Suggestions on content based on having received "cookies."
- Attempts to contact me on unsecured platforms and any response, or lack thereof, to them.
- Shared records of chat conversations.
 - Though I have asked above to use the HIPAA-compliant software for chat, you may choose to send messages within the digital platforms, including saying "hello." This information would then be shared and stored on these platforms.
- Shared images or screenshots.

Though you opt-in to use these digital supplemental platforms and provide a limited waiver of your HIPAA rights, I will still do my best to maintain confidentiality. This includes using private servers whenever possible, not sharing logging information, and continued communication through HIPAA-compliant software. Additionally, you can also be an active participant in maintaining confidentiality. Please consider the limits to confidentiality when using these technologies. Consider whom you allow to have access to your login information for these games. Be mindful of how you are maintaining confidentiality when engaging in online therapy, including engaging in sessions in a private room or using safety measures, such as wearing headphones.

Video Games: A video game is an interactive game played using a specialized electronic gaming device or a computer or mobile device, and displayed on a screen, either through the device or on a monitor/television. These games may or may not require access to the Internet. When utilizing a video game involving a gaming device, such as “Xbox, PlayStation, Nintendo Switch, mobile phone, etc.” it will be with a device you already own when engaging in online gameplay from your home. There will be no expectation of purchasing a device. The specific video game played will be one you already own or have access to. There is no expectation of buying a game. Lastly, any in-game purchases, used either through actual money or through in-game currency, will be my expense. There will be no expectation for you to spend additional funds. You may choose to purchase items not related to therapeutic gameplay at your own discretion.

Online Games: An online game is a video game that is either partially or primarily played through the Internet or any other computer network. When utilizing online gaming, there is an expectation for access to the Internet. The device used will be a computer, and the controls are often a mouse and a keyboard. This form of gameplay may involve creating user logins or using the screen share feature of the HIPAA-compliant video conferencing platform chosen for the session. The specific online game played will be one you can easily have access to. There is no expectation to purchase a game. Lastly, any in-game purchases, used either through actual money or through in-game currency, will be my expense. There will be no expectation for you to spend additional funds. You may choose to purchase items not related to therapeutic gameplay at your own discretion.

Role-Playing Games: A role-playing game is one in which the participant assumes a character's role in a fictional setting. This participant then takes responsibility for acting out the roles within a narrative. These games may or may not require access to the Internet. These games may or may not need a specific gaming platform or gaming device. These games may or may not require particular objects to participate, such as dice, a character sheet, writing utensils, and/or a board. This form of gameplay may involve learning how to create a character, keep score of your character's achievements, and follow specific commands around in-game rules to move the story forward. This form of gameplay often involves a group of people and may be provided in a group or family therapy setting. This modality may have an in-game currency that can be earned to assist your character in achieving their identified goals. This will be written into the gameplay. That being said, the specific role-playing game chosen will be one you can easily have access to. There is no expectation to purchase the game.

Themes: Games have various themes, and as part of our consideration for gameplay, we want to identify any that you are not comfortable with. Even if the game is rated appropriate for your age, gameplay can be triggering when specific scenarios or graphics occur. Please consider some of these themes and what you are and are not comfortable with.

- Body horror: gore, rot, needles, served body parts, etc.
- Bodily fluids: blood, vomit, excrement, etc.
- Spiritual horror: demons, possession, souls, undead, ghosts, etc.
- Vermin: rats, spiders, snakes, etc.
- Phobias: heights, claustrophobia, etc.
- Violence: harm to animals, injury to people, abuse, etc.
- Sexual abuse: objectification, unwanted suggestive language, unwanted advances, etc.
- Romance: relationships, partnering, marrying, intimate touching, kissing, etc.
- Physical health: cancer, chronic illness, paralysis, etc.
- Mental health: depression, hallucinations, PTSD, anxiety, etc.
- Discrimination: homophobia, sexism, racism, ableism, etc.
- Current events and issues: police violence, societal disenfranchisement, poverty, politics, etc.

I understand that it may be jarring to read these themes, but some of them are intentional within the gameplay, and others, including themes of discrimination, are often subtle and missed by those who are not triggered by them. Though some gameplay does not involve any storyline and may include simple online games such as cards or matching games, it is essential to be informed and aware of the potential themes we may engage in.

Before choosing games, we will identify the possible themes we will run into, and you can notify me if you wish to engage in them. If you are triggered during gameplay, you will inform me immediately, and we will review what triggered you. We may decide to discontinue gameplay, postpone gameplay, or attempt to continue gameplay with a heightened awareness or using coping skills or other mediums to address potential symptoms of being triggered. If in group, family, or couples therapy, clients will notify me beforehand what themes may be triggering and we will attempt to avoid these topics to the best of our abilities. If you are triggered during group/family/couple's therapy gameplay, you will notify me immediately. I will stop the gameplay, and we can review what triggered you. If you do not wish to examine this, then we will formulate a new plan for the session, which may include discontinuing gameplay, postponing gameplay, or attempting to continue gameplay with a heightened awareness or using coping skills or other mediums to address potential symptoms of being triggered. If someone else is triggered during group/family/couple's therapy, you will be expected to respect their request for stopping and the result for supporting them, even if it means discontinuing gameplay.

Additional Awareness: Lastly, please be aware that depending on how long I have been playing the game, I may be ahead in level/score or mastery of controls. I may or may not have additional skill sets that aren't accessible if you are new or at a lower level/score. As part of full disclosure, I would like you to be aware that I could gain experience, in-game points, or in-game achievements, which provide me with personal gain within the game, increasing my level/score or mastery of controls. I do not engage in these games during treatment with the goal of increasing my advantage in the gameplay. The purpose is to clinically support you. If you experience that the level/score discrepancy is causing you to struggle or notice that it affects our rapport, I will start a new game at a lower level/score, we will change the games we engage in, or we will discontinue gameplay.
